

Uwier Monument

Archaeological site

The oldest evidence of ancient buildings in Cologne can be found underground. The Ubier Monument, which was originally a tower at least 12 metres high, is likely to have been part of the fortifications of the Oppidum Ubiorum, the city of the Ubians.

Later, when Cologne was elevated to the status of a city, the Colonia Claudia Ara Agrippinensium, in 50 AD, the tower was integrated into the new city wall. Wooden piles were driven into the ground to secure the foundations in the silty soil on the banks of the Rhine. Based on dendrochronological examinations of the wooden piles, it was possible to determine that the piles were felled around 4th/5th BC. This means that the Ubier Monument can be dated to this period.
