Fascinating about Cologne's newest quarter is its unmistakable origin as a harbour that was converted into a high-quality commercial and residential area. In addition to the former port authority, historical warehouses and old cranes as technical monuments, the so-called crane houses and other new buildings dominate the picture. The quarter is essentially characterized by office buildings such as that of Microsoft, residential complexes, the art-otel and restaurants. The Rhine quay has become a popular promenade that stretches along the whole length of the historical harbour.
